

BEST COPY
AVAILABLE

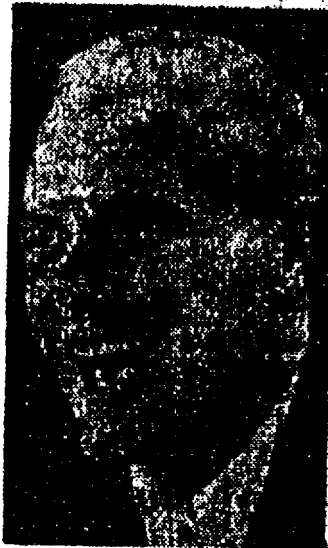

Two Americans in Washington Glenn the Hero, Powers the

"National greatness is a difficult thing to define. Every nation is made up of individuals; and among individuals, as is known, there is no uniformity. Some are charming, others irritating; some are honest, others not exactly so; some are strong, others weak; some command admiration, others, by general agreement, are anything but admirable."—George F. Kennan, Foreign Affairs magazine, April, 1951.

By Warren Rogers Jr.
A Staff Correspondent

WASHINGTON.

When George F. Kennan, now American Ambassador to Yugoslavia, wrote the lines above, he was drawing a contrast between the United States and the Soviet Union. Today, in the minds of

Herold Tribune—UPI
John H. Glenn Jr.

...Pillows from Heaven

Pure silk decorative pillows, filled with white goose down, zipper covered...where on earth

at Bonwit's could you find them at ready-made prices? From the fine Craig collection, in eighted is regarded by his fellow Americans with mixture of embarrassment and loathing.

Col. Glenn, a laughing-eyed redhead, sparkles with the charm, honesty, strength and all the other admirable qualities Americans like to think they possess as a nation and as individuals.

Mr. Powers is at best an enigma. A search of his background for clues to his personality turned up so much that is statistically average that he seems colorless and almost two-dimensional. His entrapment in a situation in which the United States government was caught in a whole mess made him almost unimpeachable—not so much because of himself did and as a result because he is a living reminder that, as a nation, we do not always behave with firm, honesty and

...must forty-year-old man in his 180-pound, 10-frame with the look of an athlete, will get the about hero's welcome in Washington tomorrow. Babies named after him. At least one young school last week why (George Washington day) was a holiday. It was clearly that it was Glenn had spun